Program

How to maintain today’s and tomorrows roads and highways.

Presented by – Ben Jordan, P.E. Wisconsin Transportation Information Center

Mr. Jordan started with a discussing about the challenges he sees in the near future. Funding – Maintaining roads using local natural resources – Replacing experienced employees – Environmental concerns – Increased emphasis on safety.

He stated he did not see the paradigm of doing more with less changing. Costs continue to increase and even though gas prices have dipped, he did not think prices for inputs of roads will also fall. He talked about the need for Counties to look closely at their pavement management data to refine where their maintenance is completed. His research found that Counties tend to rate their roads in “to good” condition - the result provides an inconsistent message to State level DOT officials.

He cautioned Counties to reconsider reducing their preventative maintenance in difficult budget times. He said the resulting backlog of projects will become overwhelming. He talked briefly on the uses of alternative recycled materials in road base. While they cost less, they are not holding up as hoped.

Discussion on winter deicing procedures included a report from each county’s Commissioner. There was a mix of salt sand options presented. Mr. Jordan commented that the use of strictly salt tends to increase the number of freeze – thaw cycles. The use of salt/sand mixtures work counter to each need. Sand works best with a snow pack, while salt melts the snow pack leaving a mushy snow mixture making the sand ineffective. He suggested using a salt only and sand only practices on different roads. He led a discussion on the results of using Ag. By-products as a preventative. He completed the salt discussion predicting that the cost of salt in the future will not likely drop to prices they were accustomed.

Mr. Jordan commented that some local Governments are bonding to cover road maintenance costs. There was a discussion about the costs associated with changing a road with an existing hard surface to gravel. He stated the costs may make this option unlikely.
